2019 WSU SHARED GOVE

2019 WSU SHARED GOVERNANCE & THE CIRCLE PROCESS

In the fall of 2018 and the spring of 2019, the Office of Human Resources scheduled Shared Governance discussion groups. Due to low registration, ten sessions cancelled. Eleven sessions hosted, with high faculty and staff participation in the remaining eleven sessions. The seventy-eight (78) participants included twenty-four faculty and fifty-four staff. Based on the group discussions, three key areas of opportunity rose to the top: communication, transparency, and involvement/input.

Shortly after, the Office of Academic Affairs and the Strategic Planning Steering Committee sought out six volunteers to work with contract consultants from the Kansas Institute for Peace and Conflict Resolution (KIPECOR) on an engagement process. The intention of the process was to build campus-wide involvement in movement towards a just and equitable process for decision-making and responsible transparency. Those volunteers came together and began meeting in February 2019. The volunteers, dubbed as "the reference team," was comprised of a faculty member and four university staff members (UP staff) from different areas on campus (human resources, academic affairs, student affairs, and the office of institutional equity and compliance). The team learned more about the circle process. The circle process would serve as the meeting used to host future shared governance meetings offered-wide-campus. After several meetings, the reference team began their solicitation for volunteers. Those volunteers would train alongside the team in becoming circle leaders. The circle leaders would serve as the guide/host of the Shocker Circles. The volunteers joined and participated in a day of training on July 12th 2019. Those volunteers included three full-time students and ten staff members (three of those staff members are also WSU students). Following the training the Reference Team and the new volunteers were dubbed, The Shocker Circle Keepers.

The work to share the future Shocker Circles began with the website, news releases, flyers, digital TV, 21.6 (i)3

Each Circle Keeper asked the same three questions each session

1. What is something that you value about the current decision making process at the University?
2. What can the University do to demonstrate respect, trust, and transparency in the decision making process?
3. How can the University best solicit input from staff, faculty, students, and administrators?

All but one of the forty participants provided feedback to the three questions asked. The anonymity of each was respected and identity was only shared by category: administrator, dean, faculty, staff and/or student. The participant chose which of the five categories represented them the best. In other words, a staff member who may have been attending school part time presented themselves as staff.

Below you will find the full set of responses to the questions with no priority given to a session or participant.

Q1: What is something that you value about the current decision making process at the University?

- f* Very happy with the process at the lower levels, individually within the department. There's a responsiveness in going up and down the chain of command much better than it has been in the past. Things are being heard, brought forward, run up the chain of command and addressed. Not sure what's going on beyond the student affairs terms of leadership. Not sure if the division is represented on the President's Executive Team to do things like Circles to see how the water is in other areas.
- f* Seems like there's more stability in the last two years for leadership positions on campus like deans. Speaks to a positive forward motion if people aren't tripping ship. Lots of things have come out of that turmoil where the university is trying to make a statement that they care, they see the mistakes, and they're trying to recalibrate.
- f* Interdisciplinary and cross-discipline academic programs helps to keep the student body engaged. (use 1.0 p.10.4.8) (3.3 s) 1.8 d

QR1: What is something that you value about the current decision making process at the University?

- f I believe there is an intent with Academic Affairs to make this happen. Faculty are trying to follow up on the intent in the plan. Not always true at the college department level.
- f I appreciate the effort to incorporate more voices into the communication and decisions being made.
- f Professionally satisfying. Having opportunities and not having constraints has been good.
- f Decisive is the word I would use. The decisions result in more actions.
- f Likes the curriculum change process. Keeps people from being railroaded.
- f Most decisions are made from the strategic goals. I like that.
- f What we have seen in leadership has been exceptional. The process is more open and can see what is taking place. Would like to see that continue. Hope we can feel the sense of openness.
- f Poverty in this world is very sad. University needs to be involved in meeting needs.
- f Culture of Yes. As long as you have thought the idea out, it is normally a "yes."
- f "Yes if" and a "no because" that allows you to think from a place of possibility.
- f Excited about the possibilities.
- f Faculty has been pushing for this conversion for the past 7 years. Things are finally starting to move and are happy/curious of where the university is heading.
- f More effort of transparency.
- f Not enough knowledge about decision making. Wishes they could be more involved or aware of this process.
- f Not necessarily aware of all the things and decisions that occur or how to get involved.
- f Values that everyone has a chance to participate.
- f As being part of it, they value the efforts of weekly briefings, WSU Today, and seeing that there is a lot of thought behind things.
- f Making efforts to be more transparent for students, staff and faculty
- f Effort that has started and will hopefully continue on shared governance
- f New process of ways to input to the process
- f Value opportunity for people to contribute regardless of their position
- f Ditto: Value opportunity for people to contribute regardless of their position
- f Not standing still and are moving forward
- f Economic and business approaches that are being considered in the process and communicated from other universities and other places
- f

QR1:What is something that you value about the current decision making process at the University?

- f I think its good that the university asked what students wanted to be done; think the advertisement to be done; it online, posters and advertisement, ~~for a~~ and resources to gain voices was done well
- f I value the transparency of who is being hired for the experience and ~~feedback~~ that the university ~~was~~ all the students voices from
- f I get details from ~~UP~~ senate on decisions and what is happen~~ing~~ appreciate the run down and summary
- f I love all of the university library special collections, tons of improvements and connections
- f I like the faculty senate; its deliber~~ate~~ that they take it to pieces; it could be postponed but the ~~deliberate~~ that, I value
- f I came from advisory council, the internship and we invited the students, listening to students tell us what direction would; the organization~~s~~ moving without a president.

QR2 What can the University do to demonstrate respect, trust, and transparency in the decision process?

- f On trust, going back to the mission statement and changes are being made. If multiple depts being affected by a change, they need to take ownership so that we can trust people have the tools they need to change their depts. Chrome River training was important and that cardholders and travelers need to be required to attend. Can we trust that once we're involved, will we even be told that the change happened? Heard from many people that a secondary change occurs and they never hear about it. Accountability would create more trust with management and between depts. Lots of people say their job is redoing work that was already done for changes.
- f I wish we had the talking point written down somewhere. Is that part of the process? Pass
- f Remember many of these issues, even when Barak was going through the interview process. Understanding was that he wasn't most people's first choice, so there was surprise when he was hired. That's why it's a closed process this time around. Seems to be a little better, and give credit to the S for making waves.
- f Feel privileged as a faculty member to have the flexibility to attend things - like this - like the voice is heard in dept. Dean has monthly meetings for everyone to share thoughts, agendas, items. Can easily see that the U needs to work hard at being transparent because not every college or dept has the same kind of direct line to the Dean. Not even sure if every dept has meetings with their chairs; there are lots of ways to miss faculty and staff. Opportunities like this are important, and would hope that upper administration strongly encourages depts heads to make it work for people to attend.
- f University could do a better job of admitting mistakes and coming absolutely clean, rather than trying to smooth it over when it's clear to everyone that a mistake was made. This has lost a lot of trust on campus for claims about enrollment numbers and decisions made. It's easy to lose respect for leadership when they can't admit the mistake and explain what happened. Agree that after the decision has been made, and then input is requested is frustrating, because even when you get input, it doesn't matter. Having vote after vote until it goes their way. This burns the trust bridge.

QR2: What can the University do to demonstrate respect, trust, and transparency in the decision making process?

f Only in the last few years have I engaged in this. I think the University was not always open and transparent. We have to recognize our history. If we make changes, some of that will not go away. We need to help with this instead of it hitting the people.

QR2: What can the University do to demonstrate respect, trust, and transparency in the decision process?

- f It's uncomfortable to talk about. There is a lot of faculty, but doesn't seem like we have a voice.
- f Availability would be something the university can do better. There is no connection or sense of connectedness. There is no open/honest communication and everything seems scripted.
- f Accountability would be a value the university could do better with. People aren't held accountable when they're events, etc and things aren't equal.
- f Transparency begins with a sense of shared mission. People at every level need to feel part of the success as a we have this shared mission and can communicate better. The value of the university will be richer. There needs to be feedback and everyone needs to have a voice.
- f Some people don't feel like they are part of the process if they are not in Morrison. They are attempting to give a time to share and feel like they are part of the process but people are still being or being heard. Have people feel more part of the process. Hearing things through the grape vine and communicating in advance where people have to think and process before needing to provide input. Finding a way to communicate more effectively.
- f I try really hard not to read the comments on Wisconsin social media. Many of the comments are just so negative from the students and that is just so hurtful to see that the students feel like they are not getting what they want. Students are mad and not having a voice and the whole referendum thing did not go over well. I would really like to see more action that we are student focused and not lip service that we are student focus. There is so much focus on the business side and we really do need to be more focused on the students and the support for them. We get emails from administration or our dean does and sometimes it is hard for it get it to the masses. Some people are better than others with cascading of the information. It raises defenses and it feels like people are being dishonest when you find out

QR2: What can the University do to demonstrate respect, trust, and transparency in the decision making process?

f My big question is Why? I don't have to be part of all the decisions and all the hiring that has taken place. If we hired them then we should trust their decision making, However if there are issues and decisions to be made that effect the university or a department and you are making big decisions tell us up front. If I like it or not I will to live with it but was communicated with f There are big things communication is one of them

QR3:How can the University best solicit input from staff, faculty, students, and administrators?

f Free food! People will go anywhere for food! Open line of communication constantly available at social engagements, places where people will go for social interaction, but may be willing to give more candid input. G

The next steps will be determined based on the content of the responses provided in the circle process. In the spirit of transparency, a compilation of the circle process responses will be posted to the Shocker Circle Keepers website (https://www.wichita.edu/academics/academic_affairs/shocker_circle_keepers/) when a format is finalized.

6. Would you like to see the circle process repeated on a wider scale in the future? Would you participate in such a process?
7. Please share any additional feedback regarding your participation.
8. What would you most like to see changed in the training and why?
9. Other comments or important insights gained from this training. Please use the back of this page if you need more room.

At the time of this report, a copy of the survey results were not available.

In closing, the Reference Team agreed that the top three themes found in the spring of 2019 Shared Governance discussions remain communication, transparency, and involvement/input. Following a recent General Meeting with the UP & USSS, it was discussed from there that the Reference Team could work in tandem with the Senates to share the information gathered to assist in their next steps of Shared Governance. The goals that have contributed to work on Shared Governance throughout 2019 continue to build along with the Senators the future of communication, transparency, and involvement/input.
